The peaswere removed from the vase by Mr. Pettigrew, the Librarian to the British Museum, and by him given to various friends to plant and rear—a feat success fully accomplished. The produce was said to be edible and of excellent flavour, cousaguently the earlier mu amy pea became pretty generally cultivated. The kind however, we more particularly only after cutting off a portion of one of his silude to here is the one introduced into Europe in 1871. An officer in the British army (Major-General Alexander Anderson) happened during that year to visit the tombs of the Pharaohs, and in the course of his explorations to come scross some seeds of peas and wheat in the hands of the mummies, which he carefully preserved until he reached Europe. He gave seeds is supposed that they have been buried near the of the pea to a friend in Guerosey, and others elsewhere. The Guernsoy friend succeeded in raising plants from the seeds, which flowered very free-Father Flegge, of Clonmel, has been arrested My. This, then, is reputed to be the origin of the mummy pes, which has found its way into hundreds of gardens during the current year. In habit of growth it differs from all of the cultivated pear the upper part of the stem being broadly fasciated or flattened, and the lower part round and very slender. The flowers, which are white, pink, and crimson, are borne at the top of the stem, forming a dense head of blossom, extramely pratty to look upon. The upper part, out off with a foot of the main stem attached, makes a lovely object when placed in a vase, and on that account the mummy peaks sure to be largely grown in the future.
